2024

7 March
2024

6:00-7:30 p.m.

The course, taught in a friendly and stress-free manner, is aimed at the AGH UNIVERSEH kick-off meeting participants (administrative staff and teachers) who have never had any contact with the Polish language or whose knowledge of the language is low.

During the course you will learn how to pronounce Polish sounds correctly, especially those typical of the Polish language. You will learn basic polite expressions to facilitate communication and establishing contacts. You will be able to introduce yourself and briefly talk about yourself, as well as ask for basic information and conduct a short dialogue. The course will be followed by an interactive on-site session.

Kick-off meeting

Schedule overview

10 March 2024

Krakow by night – a walking tour

You are cordially invited to take part in a guided walking tour of the Old Town of Krakow. Discover all the highlights of the Old Town area that made Krakow a famous UNESCO site. Admire the spectacular Main Market Square with the Renaissance Cloth Hall. Be sure not to miss the buildings of Poland's oldest university, Jagiellonian University, where Nicolaus Copernicus studied.

The tour will last approximately two hours.

Meeting point:

AGH University of Krakow, al. Mickiewicza 30, Krakow, in front of the A-0 building.

Starts 6:00 p.m.

Inclusive behavior – guidelines for KOM participants

Please find below strategies and tips to ensure that the environment and materials are accessible to an audience and inclusive of people with specific needs. We want to recommend that you take a moment to explore the valuable resources developed by the World Institute on Disability.

- Disability Etiquette
- Accessible Presentations: Top 5 Tips

The infographic is divided into two main sections. The top section, 'Accessible Presentations: Top 5 Tips', lists five key strategies for creating inclusive presentations. The bottom section, 'Disability Etiquette', provides detailed guidelines on how to interact with and support people with disabilities.

Accessible Presentations: Top 5 Tips
from the World Institute on Disability

- 1. Use person-first language unless directed otherwise.
While preparing presentations, use person-first language. For example, "person with a disability" instead of "disabled person". Some people prefer "person with a disability" and others prefer "disabled person". This is a personal preference. Most important: use the language that the person with a disability prefers.
- 2. Turn your presentation on.
Make your presentation accessible. Ensure that you can see anyone in your presentation. This includes people with hearing impairments.
- 3. Speak slowly.
This will help sign language interpreters. Explain all acronyms.
- 4. Repeat questions.
Repeat questions and captions, including questions about captions, into the presentation.
- 5. Verbally summarize.
When presenting, verbally summarize the content of your slides for those audience members who are not able to see the slides.

Bonus Tip: Intersperse content about disability with other content.

Disability Etiquette
from the World Institute on Disability

- Don't panic. Disabilities make many people uncomfortable – due to inaccessibility, many people don't see visibly disabled people in their daily lives. But it's important to remember that no one needs to make you feel comfortable with their body! While it may make you feel nervous or excited to see a person with a disability performing an everyday action like crossing the street, imagine how it would feel if you had people constantly approaching you and exclaiming how dangerous or inspiring it is for you to do normal things. Take a deep breath, and take responsibility for your own emotional response.
- Offer help thoughtfully. People with disabilities will usually ask for help if they need it, so there's no need to offer help if somebody seems fine in their activities. If somebody appears to be struggling – for example, having a hard time opening a door or seeming lost – it can be okay to offer help. If they decline, respect their decision.
- Include us in everything. People with disabilities should be included in all activities to every extent possible, so invite them to participate in business and social events. If an event is not accessible, modify it and/or provide accommodations – collaborate and be creative!
- Speak respectfully. Always speak directly to the individual with a disability, rather than to their interpreter, friend, or other companion. Also, speak at a normal speed and volume, unless asked otherwise. Avoid patronizing people with disabilities, treating them as if they have less intelligence or capability, or otherwise treating them disrespectfully. Don't make comments about how you could never live like they do, how you are inspired by them, or give unsolicited advice about their condition.
- Identify yourself. Many disabilities may make it harder for a person to recognize you right away. Start the interaction by introducing yourself, and if you've met before, remind them. "Hi, it's Cora from WID, we met at last week's event" can be so helpful!
- Respect personal space and property – don't touch without permission. Respect personal space – so do not grab or touch a person with a disability, lean in close to them, or otherwise impede their comfort. Trained service animals, canes, wheelchairs, communication boards, or any other assistive device should be considered as an extension of the person's body, and should never be touched without permission.
- Ask before discussing disability. Some people with disabilities are comfortable talking about disability topics or their personal situation, but some prefer not to. If you have questions about disabilities and experiences, ask if it's okay to discuss, and be okay with receiving a "no". Be appropriate and respectful of personal subjects, such as healthcare, traumatic events, and relationships.
- If you are not sure, ask questions. If you are unsure about what an appropriate action should be, ask individuals what they prefer. A person with a disability would much rather be asked rather than be caught in an uncomfortable situation.
